The End of a Story Begun Three Weeks Ago-An Unsatisfactory Way to Give | ways try to outdo both the first and third the Cycle-Mr. Dippel as Siegfried panels, and usually succeed, as they did and Mme. Nordica as Brunnbilde.

Three weeks ago a lusty, though oneeyed god named Wolan stood on the banks of the Rhine contemplating a palace which two stupid giants, too ignorant to know of labor unions and too dull to think of going on strike, had completed for him at the hour named in the contract. This Wolan endeavored to beat the giants out of the price of their labor, and in so doing introduced sin into the Norwegian Olympus.

I wo weeks ago last night this foolish god tried to get himself out of this scrape by starting a race of mortals who should act as free agents and atone for him vicariously. failed ignominiously and was compelled to part from his favorite daughter, putting her to sleep on a bald headed mountain surrounded by day and night fireworks. tine week ago a youthful hero forged a sword, smote a dragon and a dwarf, talked to a bird, knocked the head off the one eyed god's spear, climbed the hill, bucked the fire, found the girl and married himself to her out of hand.

Last night this same hero forgot himself. tried to marry the girl to another man and himself to another girl, was properly killed for doing so, and burned up on a funeral pyre built by the girl, which pyre sent flames clear up to Walhalla, roasting the one eyed god, together with his entire family and a good job, too.

Thus Wagner's "Der Ring des Nibelungen" wound its disjointed way from Thursday to Thursday and came to an end in the blaze of Scandinavian glory at a late hour last evening. The fire looked very cheerful indeed and many people must have wondered why Wotan ever wandered.

It is hard indeed to be serious about a presentation of the Ring dramas when given as they have been at the Metropolitan Opera House this season and are going to be presented again. To hear these works in this manner is far more unsatisfactory than it would be to read one of Gaboriau's sely woven detective stories in serial form.

The Nibelung drama has one great unity, a unity of action. There is one central plot, the commission of a crime and its punishment. Wotan sins and drags down all Walhalla with him to destruction. This is the story of the drama. All that occurs in "Die Walkuere," "Siegfried" and "Goetterdaemmerung" is incidental to this this one, huge tragedy. this. It is one huge tragedy, of which these are the three acts and "Das Rheingold" is the prologue.

Therefore the four plays ought to be pre-Therefore the four plays ought to be presented in a succession as close as possible. The ideal performance occupies four consecutive evenings. This was Wagner's design. It is in truth almost impracticable, because flesh and blood cannot stand the strain. To sing Wotan through three successive days and Brunnhilde in the same fashion is something too much. To have different impersonators destroys the unity of impression.

In the Metropolitan Opera House it might be practicable to give "Der Ring de Nibelungen" on four succeeding nights.

pending at Albany, permitting civil imprisonment only for contempt of court.

The Rev. Joseph Rushton, formerly of Chicago, told the jurors that he had heard that the Sheriff's jury, as it exists in New York, and is unknown in Chicago, was a trust. The man who told him that, said Dr. Rushton, also defined a trust as "a body of money surrounded by water." Looking around upon the numerous wine glasses confronting every juror, Dr. Rushton concluded that this particular trust was not so surrounded.

Dr. Henry Leipziger told the jurors a few stories and brought down the house by declaring that New York was undoubtedly the best governed city in the country.

Frank R. Lawrence, president of the Lotos Club, reminded the jurors that one New York sheriff, Grover Cleveland, had become President, and hoped that history might repeat itself in the case of Mr. Erlanger, who had shown himself, said Mr. Lawrence, to have a soul above fees.

Elliot Danforth gave a short talk upon the beauties of New York as a municipality, and then the jurors drank the health of their foreman, George A. Meyer, sang "Auld Lang Syne," and adjourned till next year.

lyric institution. The house is in a measure the toy of people who desire and can pay for the most expensive amusement. Signor Campanini of golden voiced memory once declared that Wagner was not amusing. Great artists, great dramatic poets, great composers seldom are.

Society has declared itself opposed to the sombre spell of the Wagnerian drama. It will suffer and be strong under an occasional "Meistersinger" or "Tamhauser," and will be even cheerful through one act of "Lohengrin," but there it stops. And so the great dramas of the Ring have to be sown wide through a month of delay and distraction and the splendor of their glory dimmed for the sake of amusement provided for amiable persons not seriously inclined.

Last night's performance of Goetterdaemments, was paved with good intentions.
